Ever wonder why people rob banks? "Because that's where the money is." At least, that's what bank robber Willie Sutton said in the 1930s, and his simple observation remains true today. Financial institutions hold substantial assets and, consequently, are prominent targets for litigation. That is why we invest so much time coaching bank and trust officers, fiduciaries, trustees and risk managers how to avoid fiduciary litigation. Frankly, litigation avoidance is less expensive and removes the obvious risk factor.
