WILLIAMS MULLEN

2025 Election Report

On Tuesday, November 4, Virginians went to the polls to elect a new Executive Branch of the Commonwealth of Virginia, along with all 100 seats in the House of Delegates. After four years of divided government between Republican Governor Glenn Youngkin and a Democratic controlled Virginia General Assembly, this election marked the first opportunity since 2019 for Democrats to gain unified control of the Commonwealth. The State Senate, whose members won't be on the ballot until 2027, currently holds a narrow 21-19 Democratic majority.

After over a year of campaigning, Virginia saw Abigail Spanberger elected Governor, Ghazala Hashmi elected Lt. Governor, and Jay Jones elected Attorney General. The Commonwealth has now elected its first woman governor, as well as the first Muslim woman to ever be elected to a statewide office in the United States, and Virginia's first African American Attorney General, marking a significant milestone in the Commonwealth's political history. The Democrats in the House of Delegates expanded their majority significantly by picking up 13 seats, delivering Speaker Don Scott the biggest Democratic majority in nearly 40 years. With the exception of one open seat, the seats Democrats gained were all held by Republican incumbents that were flipped. This is the first time a singular political party has controlled all three branches of state government since 2021. There are now 42 women elected to serve in the House of Delegates, a 26% increase since 2017.

Virginia's off-year elections have taken on a distinctly national tone in recent years and are often viewed as a referendum on the sitting President's agenda. Both parties invested record numbers of campaign sums into competitive districts and statewide races, underscoring how closely national observers continue to watch Virginia as a bellwether for the 2026 congressional midterms and beyond.

Candidates focused their campaigns on issues including the cost of living, public safety, education, abortion access, and right to work laws. Late in the race, national attention intensified following reports in early October about unearthed violent texts sent in 2022 by Democratic attorney general nominee Jay Jones, which made his race with incumbent Attorney General Jason Miyares increasingly competitive. On the other side of the ticket, Democrats continued to nationalize their own messaging, attacking the Trump Administration's job and funding cuts as well as the prolonged government shutdown.

The Statewide Ticket Results

At the top of the ticket, former Democratic Congresswoman Abigail Spanberger secured a decisive victory against Republican Lieutenant Governor Winsome Sears by a margin of 57.62% to 42.38% as of publication, one of the largest margins for any Democratic statewide Gubernatorial candidate in recent memory. Throughout the campaign, Spanberger maintained a steady lead in the polls and held a significant fundraising advantage. Spanberger and the Democrats also had history on their side: only twice in Virginia history has the elected Governor of Virginia been of the same party as the sitting US President.

Spanberger's campaign emphasized economic and educational reform, affordability, rural broadband access, housing, and public safety. She has positioned herself as a centrist problem-solver rather than a political ideologue. Spanberger first rose to political prominence in 2018 when she unseated Republican Congressman Dave Brat in Virginia's 7th Congressional District.

She went on to serve three terms in Congress, ultimately deciding not to run for reelection in 2024 so she could instead pivot to her gubernatorial run.

In the historic Lieutenant Governor race, Democratic nominee Senator Ghazala Hashmi declared victory over Republican nominee and conservative talk radio host John Reid, winning by a margin of 55.73% to 44.27% as of publication. Senator Hashmi has served in the Senate since 2020, previously making history as the first Muslim and the first South Asian American elected to the chamber. With this victory, Senator Hashmi breaks new ground as the first Muslim woman to ever be elected to a statewide office in the United States. The Lieutenant Governor of Virginia serves the critical role of presiding over the Virginia Senate and casting tie-breaking votes, a significant duty given the chamber's narrow 21-19 divide.

Virginia's Attorney General election was once again historic. In 2021, Republican Jason Miyares, the Commonwealth's 48th Attorney General of Virginia, became the first Cuban American to hold statewide office in Virginia. Now, in 2025, former Democratic Delegate Jay Jones has made history being the first African American elected Attorney General by a margin of 53.30% to 46.70% as of publication. Many Republicans had hoped that Miyares' incumbency and the controversies surrounding Jones would be enough for the incumbent to retain his seat. However, in the end, Miyares was unable to withstand the Democratic Party's strong statewide performance and broader blue wave that defined this year's election.

Contested House Races

Heading into Election Day, the political map and overall environment appeared favorable for Democrats and their path to victory. Not a single Democratic incumbent represented a district that President Donald Trump won in the 2024 presidential election, giving the Democrats a relatively secure foundation.

Conversely, seven Republican incumbents were running in districts that voted for former Vice President Kamala Harris in 2024, making them top Democratic targets. In addition, six other districts that narrowly supported Trump in 2024 were viewed as potential pickup opportunities for Democrats, who invested heavily in these competitive races hoping the dynamics of an off-year election cycle would put them into play.

The breakdown of the top 13 races our government relations team closely monitored on election night is below. A comprehensive analysis of all 100 House of Delegates contests can be found at the end of this report.

As of publication, Democrats continue to keep and significantly expand their majority in the House of Delegates, 64-36.

Note: All election results are unofficial until certified by the Virginia Department of Elections.

What This Means and What Comes Next

With the election results now set and a substantially expanded Democratic majority, policymakers turn their attention from campaigning to governing and legislating. The new administration and members of the General Assembly will begin preparing for the upcoming session, shaping their priorities on budget, education, workforce development, heath care, housing, infrastructure, and other pressing state issues.

Based on last night's results, several legislative initiatives are expected to be under serious consideration during the 2026 legislative session, including:

- Establishing a Prescription Drug Affordability board to help control rising medication costs.
- > Continuing scheduled increases to the minimum wage and evaluating future indexing to inflation.
- Revisiting right-to-work laws and exploring potential reforms to expand collective bargaining.
- > Addressing the impact of expiring federal Affordable Care Act (ACA) subsidies on Virginia's health insurance marketplace.
- > Expanding investment in renewable and clean energy projects, including solar, wind, and battery storage.
- > Implementing data center site selection and environmental reforms to manage energy demand and community impacts.
- > Debating the expansion and regulation of skill games, iGaming, and casino gaming, alongside establishing a Virginia Gaming Commission.
- > Proposing legislation to restrict the use of artificial intelligence, especially in decisions related to mortgages, insurance, and consumer lending.
- > Advancing policies to increase Virginia's housing supply and make homeownership and rental housing more affordable.
- > Expanding paid family and medical leave options for workers.
- > Establishing a regulated marketplace for the retail sale of recreational cannabis.

The coming months will be a period of transition as the Governor-elect names her cabinet members, appoints agency heads, and outlines her key legislative proposals. New members of the House of Delegates will participate in freshman orientation and caucus meetings in November and December to prepare for the upcoming legislative session, which will begin on Wednesday, January 14. The 2026 legislative session will last 60 days (as traditionally occurs in even-numbered years), during which lawmakers will consider thousands of bills and the biennial state budget. The Governor-elect's inauguration is scheduled for Saturday, January 17, after which the Governor-elect's administration will formally assume office and begin implementing its agenda.
